

Developing capability in Coaching

Psychology: A one-day workshop for practicing psychologists

For many psychologists who have already acquired chartered (UK), registered (Aus) or licensed (US) status as an applied psychologist practitioner, specialised coach and coaching psychology training options on offer do not provide any additional or supplementary knowledge and skill over and above those already developed while attaining this status

Where there is a development need, it is very often the case that the knowledge and skills needed to confidently adopt the professional identity of 'Coaching Psychologist' are drawn broadly from across the specialist skills areas from a range of psychological sub-domains.

So the issue is not around acquiring additional basic coaching or 'coaching psychology' skills, it is about ensuring that you have the right 'mix' of professional psychological knowledge and skill from across a broad range of psychological sub-specialisms.

In this one-day programme, we will explore both the benefits and pitfalls of accessing the current range of development options available to you from Coaching Supervision through to the many specialised Coaching and Coaching Psychology qualifications currently being marketed to psychologists.

We are confident that by taking an informed and innovative approach to identifying your professional development needs in relation to Coaching Psychology Practice, you will be able to identify the 'best value' development solution to suit both your professional needs and your budget.

What will I 'take away' if I attend this one day workshop?

The key output from your engagement with this workshop which includes telephone and email based support after the event, will be the creation of a personal development plan. You will develop this plan yourself using the information we provide for you along with a facilitated 'self-assessment' of your existing competencies relative to coaching psychology competencies and capabilities.

You may even find out that you already have the competencies to be a 'Coaching Psychologist'! If this is the case the main value for you will be the increased confidence to adopt and use the professional identity of 'Coaching Psychologist'.
